SMALL WORLD, WIDE HORIZONS

ON TRACK IN INDIA
On the Cover

In April, six Trinity alumni spent 13 days driving 3,900 km across India in two tiny, rickety, "three-wheeled tin cans" (one of which they covered in brown fur to resemble a dog and named "Rolloph"). The team overcame 46°C heat, an accidental detour to Bangladesh, treacherous roads with wandering cows and buffalo, one blown piston and three broken mufflers. They also raised over $9,000 for two charities. More on page 20.

Trinity Today
THE UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE

Founded in 1872 as the first college of the University of Melbourne, Trinity College is a unique tertiary institution that provides a diverse range of rigorous academic programs for some 1500 talented students from across Australia and around the world. Trinity College actively contributes to the life of the wider University and its main campus is set within the University grounds.

An Anglican institution, Trinity welcomes people of all faiths and none. The College celebrates, and is enriched by, the diversity of backgrounds of its staff and students.

Trinity's main programs include:

- The residential College for undergraduate and postgraduate students of the University of Melbourne, both resident and non-resident
- Trinity College Foundation Studies (TCFSI), a special one-year course which prepares able overseas students for undergraduate entry to the University of Melbourne and other leading Australian universities
- Trinity College Theological School (TCTS), which trains Anglican clergy and offers courses in theology for lay people, on campus, on-line, and in parishes
- International Young Leaders Summer Schools for senior secondary students.

EXCELLENCE, COMMUNITY, DIVERSITY

The quality of the student experience at Trinity College is largely dependent on the quality of the staff who teach, encourage, nurture, and inspire tomorrow’s leaders.

Starring Staff...

Chancellor’s Prize

Trinity’s Chief of Staff, Dr Brenda Holt has received the 2009 Chancellor’s Prize for excellence in the PhD Thesis – one of only four awards given annually across the whole University. Dr Holt, who completed her doctorate last year in the Faculty of Education, received the Prize for the Social Sciences area, which encompasses the Faculties of Economics and Commerce, Law, Education, and the Melbourne Business School. Her thesis was entitled ‘Global routes/rural roots: Identity, rural women and higher education’.

In June, Dr Holt was also awarded the Melbourne Graduate School of Education’s prize for the most significant research publication in 2008. This recognised her book chapter “Researching beyond words: exploring identity through photographs with metropolitan university students from rural areas”, in J Moss (ed), Researching Education Visually-Digitally Spatially: Rotterdam, Netherlands: Sense Publishers 2008, pp. 127–146.

A Fellow of Antiquaries

Dr Tamar Lewit, Subject Leader for History of Ideas, and Director of Special Academic Projects, TCFS, has been elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London. This is an archaeological and historical society of approximately 2,500 international Fellows, founded in 1707, with its headquarters in Burlington House. Election as a Fellow requires a nomination to be supported by at least 12 current Fellows in an annual ballot.

Tamar – who is only the 50th Australian able to add the letters ‘ESA’ after her name – convenes the Late Antiquity seminar series at Trinity, open to all interested academics. Presenters in Semester II include Dr Alexandra Chavarria Arnaud from the University of Padua, speaking on Roman villas and their owners (Thursday 17 December). Outstanding Staff Awards

All Trinity staff members were encouraged to nominate candidates for the 2008 Outstanding Staff Awards in Teaching, Administration and Service. These are judged on three criteria: excellence, innovation and sustained service quality. The recipients were:

Outstanding Contribution to Teaching

Chan Poi Chey, Lecturer in English for Academic Purposes, TCFS, for her sustained teaching performance and high level of commitment to students. [See page 71]

Outstanding Contribution to Service and Administration

Kirsten Fawcett, Marketing and Admissions Assistant, TCFS, for her key role, performed at a level well beyond reasonable expectations, in the implementation of the TEXAS administration system in TCFS.

Beverley Roberts, Personal Assistant to the Director of Finance and Administration, for delivering the highest possible quality of service, assistance and advice to all members of the College community.

Hermann Koppenwallner, User Services Officer, Information Technology, for his calm, responsive “can do” approach to solving problems, and application of his expert technical knowledge to achieve improved outcomes for the College.

A Cosmopolitan University

Melbourne is known as a cosmopolitan city, whose diversity is a great strength and attraction. The University of Melbourne is itself also a diverse and highly internationalised reality.

Yet while the University is justly proud of its international student numbers, it is sobering to admit that those are driven by financial need as much as by excellence and diversity, or by specific international relationships.

The same need has also led to a preponderance of students from a few countries. To have even the same number of students from a more diverse set of countries and cultures would make for a richer experience for all students, domestic or international.

The construction of a community of learning out of diverse participants means they are brought into a shared experience. The University of Melbourne has made a particular strength of its locales, including its Colleges. This is reminiscent of the idea of an ‘assemblage of strangers from all parts in one spot’, as Newman defined the University itself.

A ‘cosmopolis’ is literally a world city, or universal city. To pursue the character of our University as cosmopolitan implies extending its mission even beyond Australia’s national interest. While the University has a specific responsibility to its local and national community, it also has a role in a wider world. This is not merely an abstract moral question; an Australian higher education sector that treats international relationships primarily as revenue streams risks their sustainability.

The University, and Trinity College, should reflect more on how our international engagements can further our mission of pursuing knowledge and serving the common good.
Work on the first stage of this project—the construction of a new wing on the west side of the Old Warden's Lodge (OWL)—commenced in July, with the demolition of the garage and clearing and preparation of the site. The new wing, housing a new 90-seat teaching space, will be built before the western half of OWL is refurbished to provide three smaller seminar rooms, new toilets and a student common room. The new facilities are expected to be available for the commencement of the 2020 academic year.

Environmental measures have been given high priority and include double-glazed windows, sensor-controlled heating and lighting, natural ventilation, use of sustainable materials with good thermal performance, and energy-efficient appliances. Rainwater from the School’s roof will be collected into the Bulpadock tanks which, in turn, will supply the toilets and gardens.

The project includes landscaping of the internal courtyard, as well as the area between the School and the Chapel. A new rear garden area for small functions will also be created.

Moving right along...

While the grass grows (slowly) on the Bulpadock, and the builders start work on redeveloping the Theological School, work continues on subsequent stages of both the Building and Grounds Master Plans.

Grounds
The stonework of the Summerhouse — the somewhat quaint, but very charming stone cottage at the southern end of the Vatican Lawn — is being restored, along with that of the adjoining stone fences. The garden beds around the Summerhouse are being replanted, as is the lawn to its south which will then be watered from the Bulpadock tanks. Longer-term plans involve the restoration of the Vatican Lawn itself. This project has been generously supported by the 50-Year Reunion of the 1958 entry cohort; led by Jack Best, AO, and Janine Sargeant and their family.

Buildings
The College architects — with assistance from appropriate experts — are exploring the options for significantly improving the amenity and functionality of the Dining Hall. Areas under particular scrutiny include the acoustics and sound system, lighting, climate control, connection with the servery area, a review of the kitchen preparation area, redesign of the vestibule area, and improved public amenities.

As part of the rolling upgrade of residential facilities, the architects are also developing concept designs for the redevelopment of the bathrooms, toilets, laundries and showers in the Cowan building. Their commission is to deliver fresh, modern facilities that are easy to clean and maintain.

And it seems not only the grounds and gardens suffer from dry conditions. A special humidifier is being installed in the Chapel to prolong the life of the College’s exceptionally fine Kenneth Jones organ. Maintaining the correct humidity will minimise potential deterioration of the wood and leather components caused by overly dry air.

Print vs Electronic
Is it more environmentally responsible to read material on a screen or in printed form? It seems the answer is not entirely clear-cut.

Printed materials use paper — but paper can be recycled, and/or can be sourced from sustainable tree plantations, which themselves remove CO₂ from the atmosphere.

Major advances in printing technology have enabled ‘green’ printing to become a carbon-neutral process. For example, Trinity Today is produced under an ISO14001 accredited environmental management system which, we are told, saves around 2,000 kg of CO₂ emissions per issue compared with non-green printing. The plastic wrap in which it is mailed is 100% biodegradable.

Printed information can be read by more than one person. Some of our Foundation Studies staff are currently trialling a revised distribution system whereby, instead of receiving their own individual copy of Trinity Today, they will share communal copies in their staff rooms.

Reading on screen first necessitates the manufacture of your computer equipment, itself a process with a large carbon footprint. Discarded computers contribute significantly to our waste disposal problems.

You will of course use electricity while generating and reading information in electronic format. More energy is consumed each time another person reads the same information.

But do you leave your screen and computer turned on when not actually in use? Do you print the information after reading it on screen? Your individual behaviour can substantially influence the level of greenhouse gas emissions. This perhaps is the key to tipping the scales one way or the other.
Trinity is embarking on a new and exciting initiative that will bring with it significant long-term changes in the College.

Setting a Sustainable Strategy

Over the next three to five years, Trinity will examine all aspects of sustainability in the life and work of the College in order to inform, develop and start to implement a Sustainability Strategy that sets goals on three fronts:

The campus
Trinity will first audit our use of energy and water, our carbon emissions and otherwise measure what we consume and produce, establish goals for carbon reductions and seek to enhance the sustainability of our physical community.

The curriculum
Trinity will look at all areas of teaching and learning and ask how we can enhance opportunities for students to develop knowledge and skills related to sustainability.

The knowledge
Trinity will seek ways to share what we learn from our experience with partners and friends such as schools, colleges, churches, and the wider University of Melbourne community as a form of “knowledge exchange”.

GETTING STARTED
Already, this process is underway. Following the Board’s endorsement of the proposal in May, Mr Gary Norman (above left) has been appointed to lead the Strategy development, adding the role of ‘Director, plantigreen – Trinity’s Sustainability Projects’, to his existing responsibilities as Director of Finance and Administration.

A Sustainability Steering Committee – comprising a wide representation of staff, students and management from all parts of the College – has been established to oversee development and implementation of the Strategy. It is being assisted in its work pro bono by consulting firm McKinsey & Company, which has gathered expertise in this area under its Climate Change Special Initiative. McKinsey’s representatives working with the College have included Trinity alumni Phyl Georgiou (TC 2003), Alex Oppes (TC 2003) and Rebecca Nyst (TC 2003).

REDUCING IMPACT
An external consulting firm is currently undertaking two environmental assessments – measurement of the College’s carbon footprint, and an energy audit. These results will provide a stock-take of our starting position and identify opportunities to set carbon-emission and energy-usage reduction targets.

Second semester also sees the installation – in conjunction with Alliance Catering, the College’s in-house caterer – of a Bokashi recycling system. This organic process ferments food waste inside a sealed container to produce a fertiliser that can be used on the College gardens.

Endorsing the College’s clear commitment to sustainability, the Warden, Associate Professor Andrew McGowan, said, “These efforts will build on the important and continuing contributions made by staff and students – individually and through groups like the staff Green Team and the TCFS and resident students’ Environment Committees – whose efforts I gratefully acknowledge.”

The Village Green

The long-awaited return of grass to the Bulpadock – the ‘village green’ that sits at the heart of the Trinity campus – took place on 20 May with the delivery of truck-loads of rolled up turf. A team of workers immediately set to, rolling it out with incredible speed so that by midday almost half of the Bulpadock was luxuriating in a carpet of bright green grass (above right). The entire job was completed the following day.

The Village Green

For the time being, the area must remain fenced off until the new grass is fully established. Its progress is being closely monitored and, depending on the weather, it is hoped that the fence can be removed by about the end of September. Celebrations are planned!

A weather station, recently installed on the roof of the Cowan building, will play a vital role in ensuring economical and effective watering of the Bulpadock. The station measures surface conditions, such as humidity and moisture, and activates the sprinkler system according to these indicators. This will reduce water use by up to 20% compared with a typical automatic timer-controlled system.
Four new Fellows

On 14 May, the Council of Trinity College bestowed its highest honour – reserved for individuals of outstanding achievement – when it elected four new Fellows to join this select group of international community, academic, business and professional leaders. The total number of Fellows of Trinity College is limited to a maximum of 30 at any one time. All are lifetime appointments.

Mr David Brownbill, AM, FRACS (TC 1959) completed his MBBS in 1962 – the year in which he was also Rugby Captain at Trinity. After serving with a surgical team in South Vietnam, he studied neurosurgery in the UK. While Senior Neurosurgeon at the Royal Melbourne Hospital, 1975-1995, he and Sir John Holland founded the Stroke Research Foundation in 1983. David was its Executive Director, 1991-93, and after its name changed, was Vice-President and Director until 1996, when it became the National Stroke Foundation. David has been a volunteer at Trinity for over 20 years, including as a tutor, Member of Council and the Board, Chairman of the Foundation, 1987-1995, and since 2007, Chairman, Board of Governors. David received the Advance Australia Award for Medicine in 1991.

Mrs Louise Gourlay, OAM, née Holmes, is Chair of Trustees at the William Buckland Foundation, one of Australia's largest philanthropic trusts. She has been Vice-President of the Board, President of Auxiliaries, and is currently Patron of the Royal Children's Hospital. In 2004, Louise and her late husband, John Gourlay (TC 1954), founded the Gourlay Charitable Trust, which supports education, the community and the arts. In 2005, they established the Gourlay Visiting Professorship of Ethics in Business at Trinity, and in February 2008, Louise opened the College's new residential building, named Gourlay in the family's honour. She is the inaugural President of the Warden's Circle at Trinity and last year, the family established the Louise Gourlay Prize for Social Change in the residential College.

Dr Michael 'Taffy' Jones, AM, PSM (TC 1957) was Senior Student at Trinity in 1960 and 1961. Graduating in 1963, he worked in rural general practice before moving into medical administration, ultimately becoming Director of Medical Services at the Alfred Hospital Healthcare Group, 1995-1999, and President of the Royal Australasian College of Medical Administrators. In retirement, he is a consultant to the World Health Organisation (WHO) and received the 2005 AMA Victoria Gold Medal for his services to medicine in this state. Amongst his many roles at Trinity, he has been a Resident Fellow, Acting Dean, medical tutor and GP for resident students, Member of Council and President of the Union of the Fleur-de-Lys.

Dr Denis White was Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Economics and Politics at Monash University for over 20 years, and also Warden of Deakin Hall, 1973-77. In the political arena, he served as Director of the Private Office of the Prime Minister, The Right Hon Malcolm Fraser, 1982-83. As Executive Director of the Foundation Studies Program at Trinity College, 1991-98, Dr White attracted highly qualified and dedicated staff who developed an outstanding educational program and – under his energetic leadership – built it from modest beginnings into a unique educational enterprise that is now in high demand. Dr White was also a member of the College Council, 1995-97. He now runs Stride Consulting P/L, and grows, processes and markets olives and olive oil.

Jim Craig joins the Board

The Chairman & Executive Director of Macquarie Capital, Mr Jim Craig, joined the Trinity Board in May. He has recently returned to Melbourne after eight years in London where he was CEO of Macquarie's European business and Head of Macquarie Capital in Europe. Jim, who holds BEc and LLB (Hons) degrees from the University of Adelaide and a Master of Laws from Melbourne, was a resident tutor at Trinity from 1988 to 1991, including roles as President of the Senior Common Room and joint Acting Dean. He worked as a lawyer in Melbourne and Tokyo, before joining Macquarie Capital's Melbourne corporate finance group in 1994. Appointed Head of Resources in 1999, he moved to London in 2001 to run the firm's resources business on a global basis, subsequently assuming responsibility for the Macquarie Capital Funds Group. Jim is also a Director of the Murdoch Children's Research Institute.
The Warden, Associate Professor Andrew McGowan, and the Master of Ormond College, the Revd Dr Rufus Black, discussed ‘Religion at the Crossroads: engaging global challenges’ at the Melbourne College of Divinity (MCD) Centenary Colloquium at Trinity on 11 June. Chaired by MCD Dean Professor Paul Beirne, the forum attracted over 100 people. These excerpts are taken from the Warden’s address.

‘Religion’ is a modern invention. The idea that religion constitutes a distinct realm of thought and practice, to be arrayed alongside of but quite separately from music, physics, cooking, sex, politics and whatever other realms of activity our society deems and recognizes, would have made no sense to the authors of the Bible, or even to the early moderns who wrote or translated works like the Book of Common Prayer or the King James Bible. Religion is fairly close if not quite identical to the idea of ‘culture’. Religion is not just prayer; it is Westminster Abbey, the Alhambra and Angkor Wat; it is vegetarianism and keeping kosher and Easter eggs; it is Bach and the Blues and Bhagavad Gita; it is T S Eliot and the Psalms and Rumi.

The tragic absurdity of the fairly common view that religion has been responsible for most of the world’s ills, and wars in particular, is therefore correct in a surprising if limited sense — but only if we accept and understand that it is ‘responsible’ for everything else too. Those who espouse that sort of view engage in an extraordinary sort of special pleading which grants credit for all virtue to other areas of activity or endeavour, and all vice to religion, rather than facing more honestly the deep ambiguity of human experience of religion, and indeed of humanity.

Small world, wide horizons

Trinity College has welcomed a new Chaplain, the Revd Dr Andreas Loewe. Having arrived from Cambridge in the UK just a few days before with his wife, poet and academic Dr Katherine Firth, he was commissioned by the Warden and Archbishop Philip Freier at the first Choral Evensong for Semester II.

Andreas has been Associate Vicar of Great St Mary’s, Cambridge, UK, and Chaplain of Michaelhouse, a centre which combined aspects of Church life with an award-winning café and gallery. He has also been a member of the Faculty of Divinity at Cambridge and a secretary of the Ecumenical Forum for Young Theologians, an international association for lay and ordained ministers from all denominations.

The Warden, the Revd Dr Andrew McGowan, who spoke at the installation on 1 August, said Andreas and Katherine’s arrival at Trinity was a reminder that Anglicans inhabit a small world.

‘Having first met them in the USA, and having worked with Andreas’ mother there and Katherine’s parents in Western Australia, I can’t help but see Andreas and Katherine’s arrival as a reminder of the gifts and talents a College like Trinity keeps receiving from all parts of the world, as well as all parts of the Church. Both the College and the Church must view themselves against that widest possible horizon.’

Andreas said: ‘I am excited to be working as part of a strong Chaplaincy team and very much look forward to getting to know students, staff and regular worshippers at the College Chapel.’

As College Chaplain, Andreas’ work will centre on the residential College community, and he will also lead the liturgical life of the Chapel and the wider Chaplaincy team at Trinity, working with Foundation Studies Chaplain the Revd Kim Cruickshank and Associate Chaplain in the residential College, the Revd Dr Dorothy Lee. The Revd Dr Tim Gaden will continue as Dean of the Theological School.

Sydney Theology Intensive

‘Is Scripture Enough?’

Demand far outstripped the places available at an intensive day’s thinking on the question of ‘Is Scripture Enough?’ presented in Sydney on 4 July by faculty members from Trinity’s Theological School.

The Warden, the Dean of the Theological School Tim Gaden, and lecturers Dorothy Lee and David O’Brien conducted the day-long intensive at St Paul’s College, the University of Sydney, as part of the teaching program offered by St James’ Church, King Street.

The Warden argued that ‘the Bible is God’s Word written, not the whole of God’s Word’. Michael Jensen, a lecturer in doctrine at Moore College, Sydney, later took part in a plenary discussion forum, while seminars dealing with the place and authority of Scripture concluded the day.

The following morning, the Trinity theologians preached in four Sydney parishes. Dorothy Lee ‘found herself preaching to the Prime Minister, who was in the congregation she addressed at St James’.

Ethics and Business – this is the moment

Professor Ed Freeman will present the
Gourlay Professorship of Ethics in Business
Annual Public Lecture 2009
'Really getting out of the mess: putting Business and Ethics together once and for all'
Wednesday 30 September
5.30pm at RACV Club,
501 Bourke Street,
Melbourne.

Bookings/Enquiries:
Jeff Richardson
T: +613 9348 7141
E: jeff@trinity.unimelb.edu.au

The Gourlay Visiting Professor of Ethics in Business for 2009—10, Professor R Edward Freeman, will be at Trinity from 28 September to 1 November this year and return in 2010.

Professor Freeman is the Elis and Signe Olsson Professor of Business Administration at The Darden School, University of Virginia, USA; Academic Director of the Business Roundtable Institute for Corporate Ethics; and co-Director of Darden’s Olsson Center for Applied Ethics, one of the world’s leading academic centres for the study of ethics. He is also Professor of Religious Studies and a Faculty Advisor to the University’s Institute for Practical Ethics, and Adjunct Professor of Stakeholder Management at the Copenhagen Business School in Denmark. He has also taught at the University of Minnesota and The Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania.

‘There is a moment in history for Business to grasp Ethics. The Global Financial Crisis has created that moment.’ — Ed Freeman

Professor Freeman is the author or editor of over 20 volumes in the areas of stakeholder management, business strategy and business ethics. He is perhaps best known for his award-winning book Strategic Management: A Stakeholder Approach, published in 1984, in which he suggested that businesses build their strategy around their relationships with key stakeholders.

While at Trinity, Professor Freeman will conduct and award the Louise Gourlay Prize for Social Change, present a Fireside Chat, and be available to students for informal consultation.

Within the University, he will teach undergraduate and postgraduate classes in the Faculty of Economics and Commerce, and the Melbourne Business School. He will also conduct executive workshops for the broader business community in Melbourne and Sydney.

Hailed as a ‘world first’, the Gourlay Visiting Professorship of Ethics in Business was established at Trinity in 2004 by retired stockbroker the late John Gourlay, AM (TC 1954), and his wife Louise Gourlay, OAM, to promote the teaching of ethics in business. It annually brings to Melbourne an internationally distinguished lecturer to engage with students and business leaders at Trinity College, the Melbourne Business School and the University.

Ed Freeman is the third Gourlay Visiting Professor. Previous incumbents have been Steve Salbu (2005–06), initially from the McCombs School of Business at the University of Texas, and subsequently from the Georgia Institute of Technology; and Laura Hartman (2007–08) from De Paul University, Chicago.
AIMING HIGH AT YLSS

"I was really scared of flying on the trapeze, but I’m proud of myself for doing it."

Sally Butler, an expatriate Australian high school student from the United Arab Emirates summed up the feelings of most of the participants in the 2009 Mid-Year Young Leaders Summer School (YLSS), held 29 June-12 July.

But by the end of the two weeks, the teenagers’ sense of achievement embraced much more than mere circus skills. They had gained confidence in public speaking, been inspired by lectures on the Psychology of Persuasion, thrown themselves into Bollywood dancing, honed their critical thinking, teamwork and leadership skills, sampled Melbourne’s cultural offerings – including an AFL footy match at the MCG – and thrived on residential College life.

"IF SUMMER SCHOOL IS LIKE UNI, I’M GOING TO UNI!"

Jack Mitchell, Geelong.

All of the students – including those from countries such as Indonesia, China and Thailand – had come prepared for engaging academic sessions and the fun of extracurricular activities.

What many did not expect, however, was building lifelong friendships with people from different cultures – even within Australia. Cyril Johnson, an Indigenous student from Sydney, found Summer School an invaluable experience: ‘I was really scared about coming, but I feel that now I have more understanding of other people’s cultures,’ he said, smiling broadly.

As the Summer School drew to a close, it became clear to all what a transformational experience it had been. Hee-Su Jang from Shanghai, was surprised by how quickly the group had come to understand each other. ‘We were able to talk freely about things like racism and feel comfortable,’ he reflected.

I didn’t expect to become so close to everyone here — I’m not ready to go home yet,’ admitted Alvina Urusula Tjandra from Indonesia.

Alumni and parents say YLSS exceeds expectations

"As an alumnus of Trinity I was delighted when my daughter, Anna, was offered a place in the 2007 Summer School. I thought the opportunity for her to experience a taste of campus and College life would be invaluable. But her feedback indicated that she got way more from Summer School than just a sample of College life. The thoughtfully structured two weeks and broad mix of participants gave her a perspective on the opportunities ahead for her that exceeded her expectations and ours.

My observation is that the experience of the Summer School gave her a much deeper sense of her own potential, lasting insights into, and understanding of, the world around her, and connections with young people from very diverse backgrounds."

Michael Traill (TC 1979), Melbourne. Former investment banker and now CEO of Social Ventures Australia (SVA), a not-for-profit organisation that works to drive social change.

"We sent Isaiah to Summer School so that she could experience a different style of teaching and also sample life in Melbourne and Australia. It definitely broadened her mind, broadened her choices, and made her set her sights on studying in Melbourne, rather than a local polytechnic."

Larissa and Benjamin Wong, Singapore, who sent their daughter, Isabel, to Summer School in 2006, aged 14. This year she has returned to Trinity as a student in the 2009 July Main intake of Foundation Studies.

"Summer School enriched my life in so many ways that I didn’t expect. Academically, it was highly rewarding … but it was also beneficial from a social and personal development aspect. I learnt a lot about the rich tapestry of people that makes up the world, something that I wasn’t exposed to in high school."

Mitchell Johnson (3rd year Medicine), from Melbourne, who came to the 2004 Summer School, and is now a resident student.
Chifley’s PIPE

Why did the 16th Prime Minister of Australia write personally to 11-year-old schoolboy, Peter Gebhardt? And how did the Trinity Archives acquire a pipe which once belonged to that same Prime Minister?

The explanation comes from the said Peter Gebhardt (TC 1955), now a retired County Court Judge and former Principal of The Geelong College, who has generously donated both the letter and the pipe to Trinity.

His Honour Judge Gebhardt says:

‘In 1946-47, following the end of World War II, there was a considerable amount of industrial unrest. My grandfather, Edmund Drake-Brockman, was the Chief Judge of the Arbitration Court. Mr Chifley was the Prime Minister. Notwithstanding their different political backgrounds they became good friends. On one occasion in 1947, Chifley attended at the Court to see my grandfather. He accidentally left behind a pipe, which my mother, then Associate to her father, returned to the Prime Minister on the “condition” that one of his pipes be given to her “small son” for his 11th birthday.

The pipe was duly delivered and as a “thank you” my mother organised through Dammans — tobacconists on the corner of Swanston and Collins Streets — for some Three Nuns tobacco to be sent to Chifley. Thus the accompanying letter.’

A surprise rush into their dining room to burst into Queen’s Fat Bottom Girls quickly convinced the resident students of St Mark’s College, Adelaide, that the visiting No But Barbershop a cappella group from Trinity College, Melbourne, was no ‘ordinary’ choir. As a result, No But’s concert at St Mark’s on the Saturday night of their inaugural interstate tour in April, was filled to capacity.

St Mark’s generous hospitality also included chauffeuring the group to their performances around Adelaide in a restored 1937 utility! Audiences at boys’ school St Peter’s College and girls’ school Seymour College were thrilled by the band of high-energy lads singing a range of a cappella tunes that included hits by The Killers, Red Hot Chilli Peppers and others, as well as some traditional barbershop favourites from the 1920s.

The tour was excellent preparation for two sell-out concerts the following week at the Guild Theatre, at the University of Melbourne. The second show opened with the public debut of Trinity’s female a cappella group, The Candystripes, their performance also receiving a great reception.

Dr Angus Turner, Resident Tutor, Convenor of Trinity Tiger Tones

Since returning from Adelaide, the group has changed its name and is now known as the Trinity Tiger Tones.
It is difficult to imagine a more challenging play for college students to present successfully than Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party. Ambiguous and oblique, it is imbued with an abiding sense of menace, the creation of which requires precise dialogue delivery, a mature understanding of Pinter's complex wordplay, and sophisticated characterisation. Producer Meliesha Bardolia (2nd year Arts) wrote in her program notes that the selection of The Birthday Party, by herself and assistant producer Stella Charlsl (2nd year Arts), was an 'ambitious' attempt to move beyond the 'hackneyed plays which pass around the College Crescent conveyor belt'. It is to the credit of all involved that this risk was rewarded and that the production, directed by Cameron Sievers, was so warmly received.

Meg [Stella Charlsl] and Petey [Angus Cameron (2nd year Arts)] own a bed-and-breakfast in an English seaside town, at which the secretive Stanley [Joshua Crowther (2nd year Arts)] is a long-term boarder and Lulu [Imogen Dewey (2nd year Music)] is an occasional visitor. Stanley's hiding place is exposed by the arrival of the sinister Goldberg [Alice Young (2nd year Arts)] and McCann [Lucy Foster (1st year Arts)], and a chain of unsettling events is set off; after Stanley's 'birthday party' he is rendered silent and inert and Goldberg and McCann depart with him, apparently successful in their mission.

Performances were uniformly excellent. Charlsl is completely natural on the stage, and as the friendly, chatty Meg she displayed not just the warmth and comic timing to which Trinity audiences are by now accustomed, but also the requisite pathos. Cameron's Petey was broadly drawn and entertaining; the sense of menace heightened when his goofiness and cheesy smile gave way to concern, and his final words to Stanley, 'Don't let them tell you what to do!', packed a powerful punch.

Stanley is in many ways the central character, and Crowther played his deterioration very well. From his very first shouts from off-stage, Crowther's characterisation created unease, building to the truly disturbing (and brilliantly lit) scene before interval. His fear under interrogation by Goldberg and McCann was palpable. Likewise Dewey was convincing and glamorous as Lulu, enigmatic in her relationships with Stanley and Goldberg.

Casting Young (above right) and Foster (above left) in male roles was a risky, but ultimately successful, directorial decision. Young dominated the stage, her sure manner and wide smile simultaneously confident and menacing. Foster's physicality was notable, her drinking and singing while standing on a stool creating a memorable comic moment. The skilfully presented tight rapport between the two, however, was arguably most impressive; alternately funny and disturbing, their machine-gun quick delivery creating such intensity, it sometimes seemed almost to suck the air out of the theatre.

The set was sparse but effective. Entrances were made through gaps in sheets that formed walls and were backlit to allow clever use of shadows, while a central table formed the focal point for the action. Howling guitar music, replete with maniacal screaming, created a sense of foreboding before the play had even begun. Lighting, meanwhile, was outstanding; from the shadows on the sheets, to the single light bulb hanging above the table, to the use of a lone torch at various stages, it expertly focused attention and created atmosphere.

This was a highly accomplished production of a complex and difficult play. One can only commend the ambition of all involved and hope that future productions embrace similarly challenging material.
Students come to TCFS from over 20 countries at any one time, aiming for admission to university in Australia. While studying alongside each other, they also gain cross-cultural understanding and build international friendships.

Arie Siabastian, 18, from Indonesia; Rafael De Almeida, 19, from Brazil; and Janaka Wijesekera, 20, from Sri Lanka, are best friends.

For just over 12 months, the three have studied together, socialised together and spent most of their waking hours in each other's company. They share a love of soccer and music, and between classes were generally to be found at the piano in the atrium of the Swanston Street Foundation Studies campus. Janaka taught Arie to play, but Rafael just 'likes to listen'.

'We entered Trinity College Foundation Studies (TCFS) together last year in the June Extended program. It was a small class - just 16 students - and as the other TCFS intakes were on holidays then, we spent all our time together and formed very strong bonds. Even after joining the July Main program five weeks later, we still remained very close, though we have friends in the July intake as well,' explains Janaka, with the others nodding agreement.

That they come from totally diverse geographic and ethnic backgrounds has had no bearing on their friendship. Nor have the very different paths that brought them together.

Janaka studied for his A levels at Ananda College in his home city of Columbo and was accepted into Engineering at the University of Melbourne. But he lacked the prerequisite subjects for Mechatronics, the course he really wanted to do.

After considering his options, he decided to take the TCFS pathway which guaranteed him entry provided he obtained an average of at least 80 for his best four subjects. 'My father felt that Australia was a safer country in which to study than either USA or UK and the education agent said that Melbourne was the best Australian university,' he says.

So Janaka spent his TCFS year living in a College Square apartment across the road from the University and his results duly earned him his place at Melbourne University. Then the Global Financial Crisis intervened - financial stress caused by the untimely collapse of a major Sri Lankan bank forced a last minute change to his plan.

'Now I am studying a Bachelor of Advanced Manufacturing and Mechatronics Engineering at RMIT University,' he says. 'I am pursuing my Mechatronics dream!' He has moved in with his uncle in Dandenong to reduce his living costs.

The three clearly enjoyed Trinity and are full of praise for the TCFS course. 'You meet lots of people and make lots of friends. Everyone's so nice, the teachers are really good and helpful, and the facilities are great,' says Rafael unhesitatingly.

Janaka agrees, also mentioning the plentiful friendships, which meant he wasn't homesick. 'The course structure of lectures followed by tutorials was great, too. And the constant assessment during the year made it less stressful than having a single exam at the end,' he adds.

'The teaching at Trinity made studying with your friends enjoyable,' says Arie. 'Back home, I wasn't very motivated, but studying in groups really helped.' There was just one thing that Arie didn't like: 'The TCFS course was too short! We didn't want it to end.'

Unlike Rafael, Arie has lived apart from his parents since he was 12 years old. With a maid to care for him, he was sent away from his home in Pekanbaru on the Indonesian island of Sumatra, in order to avoid the political unrest then troubling his homeland. He lived alone (except for the maid) in his own house, first in Malaysia, and then for the last five years in Singapore where he attended Saint Andrew's School.

Arie has followed his older brother, 22, and sister, 24, to Australia and lives with his brother in a city apartment. His aim was to study Chemical Engineering at the University of Melbourne - and that's what he's now doing.

Janaka agrees, also mentioning the plentiful friendships, which meant he wasn't homesick. 'The course structure of lectures followed by tutorials was great, too. And the constant assessment during the year made it less stressful than having a single exam at the end,' he adds.

'The teaching at Trinity made studying with your friends enjoyable,' says Arie. 'Back home, I wasn't very motivated, but studying in groups really helped.' There was just one thing that Arie didn't like: 'The TCFS course was too short! We didn't want it to end.'

But their friendship will endure - they all agreed on that.
Poi Chan's teaching philosophy is simple: 'I want to create interest and excitement in my classroom,' she says. It's an approach that is singularly successful.

Since 2002, Poi (above) has taught English as a Second Language (ESL) to students in the February and September Extended intakes of Trinity College Foundation Studies (TCFS). These students meet the academic entry standards required for TCFS but need to improve their English language skills. To this end, they undertake 20 weeks of intensive English study — with around four hours a day in Poi's classes — before joining the July and February Main intakes respectively.

"Mostly, the ESL course aims to prepare students to succeed in the core TCFS subject of English for Academic Purposes (EAP)," Poi explains. "It's important to me that by the end of their 20 weeks, these students are confident, happy and ready to enter the main program."

The course framework uses a standard, internationally recognised approach, but Poi adapts its themes to an Australian context by basing classroom discussions on newspaper cuttings and TV and video clips of items in the news. Collecting this source material takes up most of her evenings!

"The students want to learn about Australian culture so discussing current issues enables them to gain that insight while improving their English skills at the same time. The students actually set the direction of class topics — if they are interested they will do the research and tell you about it. If not, then you have to move on!"

Poi believes firmly that she must not only prepare her pupils for academic use of English, but also meet their day-to-day social needs. "They come from varying backgrounds and often need some "survive" English — how to ask directions, or order food, or go shopping, those kinds of things. We role-play situations and I encourage them to go out and perhaps try asking for directions as if they are lost. Then we talk about that experience in class."

"I WANT TO CREATE INTEREST AND EXCITEMENT IN MY CLASSROOM"

Poi herself is Chinese, but was born in Borneo, which until the early 1960s was a British colony, so she was educated entirely in English. She has a BA(Hons) in Geography from the University of Sussex and an MA in Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) from Nottingham University in the UK. She taught English for 10 years in each of Malaysia and Singapore before coming to Australia in 2001.

"My students are sometimes surprised to meet me — they expect to learn English from an Anglo-Saxon!"

16 from 9 = Diversity

The 2009 June Extended intake of Trinity College Foundation Studies (TCFS), welcomed 16 students from nine countries. Pictured in the Junior Common Room on 9 June — their first morning at Trinity — are:

A life in screenwriting

"Making a screen drama can entail more alarms and diversions, confrontations and compromises, than you'll see within the drama itself.

Scriptwriter Roger Dunn (TC 1958) reflects on the halcyon days of Australian television drama.

A STUDENT' ABSEILS OUT THE WINDOW OF THE CRIPPS MIDDLE COMMON ROOM WHILE 'POLICE' SHEPHERD OTHERS TO 'SAFETY' ON THE GROUND BELOW ...

Such scenes became commonplace at Trinity for four days in July, when a film crew of about 40 actors and technicians descended on the College to shoot an episode of Network Ten's popular television police drama, Rush. With them came several tonnes of equipment, a giant crane, and numerous support and catering trucks that took over the northern carpark.

Bemused staff watched discreetly from the sidelines (without getting 'in shot'), but resident student Ngaree Blow (3rd year Science) was recruited to join the cast for a day, replacing an actor who was ill. Bringing authenticity to her role as 'a student', she found herself working alongside several well-known Australian actors, including Rodger Corser (Underbelly, McLeod's Daughters) and Jolene Anderson (All Saints). Casual staff member Frank Hofheins (TC 2005) also scored an on-screen appearance.

The episode, which includes about 20 minutes of scenes shot in Clarke's, the Billiards Room, the Junior Common Room, Sharwood Court, around the College Oak, and inside and outside Bishops', is expected to screen in Melbourne on about 22 October.
Returning to Australia after about five years in the 'swinging London' of the early '60s — during which I'd become a publisher's editor — I landed a very different berth on the writing team of the ABC's Bellbird. This was the first TV soap in Australia and screened for quarter of an hour before the evening news, four nights a week. So popular was it, particularly in country districts, that the draw on many local water supplies dropped to nil while it was on.

Scripts for Bellbird were written by a rotating team of about six writers, each of us writing a week's episodes at a time. Every Monday at the weekly story conference, the writer, in the hot seat, supplied everyone else with copies of the proposed "scene breakdowns" — a task which, in 1971, still involved wrestling six pages interleaved with carbon paper into a heavy-duty typewriter and then bashing away like a carpenter driving nails. This encouraged great economy of prose!

While scene breakdowns are simply prose descriptions of each scene needed in the construction of the drama, creating them had its challenges. The contracts of certain actors allowed them to appear in two, three, or all episodes of the week, or month. There were also severe limitations on how much location filming the budget could allow.

Paradoxically, these restrictions added to the writer's fun. Your peers defied their hats, so to speak, when you wriggled around all the checks and balances and came up with a good resolution — bypassing unavailable actors, unavailable sets, and unavailable location filming, to tell a believable story.

On Bellbird we writers were inventing the show, week by week, explained by our story editor. Thus everyone knew exactly where the show was heading, which helped in the writing of our individual scripts.

From Bellbird I was recruited to Crawford Productions, which was rapidly expanding. Hector Crawford — a magnetic personality — had fought the weekly to persuade the commercial channels that their audience wanted Australians on their screens, and had proved the point with his police shows, Homicide and Division 4.

Then came the formidable blockbuster serial, The Sullivans. This was the ongoing story of 'a family at war' that took the young men of the Sullivan family — a typical every-day Australian family — into many of the World War II zones in which Australia operated.

It was an almost insane ambition. But the silver-haired salesman genius of Hector sold it into reality — and there we were, landed with the task of simulating Australia at war, turning out half-hour episodes a week.

I became the storyliner, and the sole creator of the scene breakdowns on which the freelance scriptwriters then based their scripts. There was no writer contribution to story design at all — they dramatised the human interaction in the scenes I had devised. I myself worked from documents — produced by an extraordinary research team — that covered each month of the war.

Against this background I had to weave the family's personal dramas...

The audience devoured it, thankfully believing in the Dandenongs doubling as New Guinea jungle, and so forth. The Sullivans became central viewing for millions of Australian families.

But nowhere else in the world were five half-hours of drama being generated every week, for some 47 weeks a year — and the pressure on me as "the story engineer" was unsustainable. Following months of exhaustion I handed over to Ray Kolle, who had been my story editor on Bellbird. Worn down even longer than I'd been, Ray actually collapsed on the office floor.

So we two became instrumental in persuading the producers of Crawford shows, and cheroot-smoking Hector himself, to adopt the Bellbird story team method of coping with this draconian workload.

Thus began the modern way of constructing all continuing TV shows — not just the soap operas, but also the stand-alone episodes of shows like Blue Heelers. Methodology differs between the two types of shows, but, basically, the meetings that used to happen in the enlightened Crawford days of Carson's Law, The Flying Doctors and so forth, have set the model for everything since. I worked on them all, fitting in lots of other stuff like writing kids books and standing alone TV dramas.

I also did a season's stint as the staff writer on the American TV series of Mission Impossible, made here in Melbourne. This role combined story development with the writers who "got" the formula of this show, plus editing their work and writing myself — a bit like The Sullivans' early days, but only for one hour a week of story time, not two-and-a-half. Heavy work, nonetheless. Somehow the ingenuity of the production team made the Chinese Temple in South Melbourne believable as a location in China, and Monashee, at Lilliwaup, as somewhere in central Europe.

A writing gig on a soap is no easy ride. You have to be a good dramatist. Notable writers like Alan Hopgood have kept Neighbours almost eternally watchable, around the world. I was story editor there for almost a year, a long way back. Story meetings with my gang of storylumberscript editors were always boisterous fun. They were highly talented young people, and included Marieke Hardy, now a regular columnist in The Age Green Guide.

My life since those intense, though invigorating, days has been spent in trying to get various feature film screenplays off the ground. Along with opera and full-scale musical theatre, movie making is the most capital-intensive art form there is — several millions of dollars a throw.

A script co-written with Anthony Langone, now 33, is on the brink of production, after eight years in the financial wilderness. Called Second Drill, it was by the bedside of the great Charles "Bud" Tingwell, who was to have been its director, when he died in hospital this year.

But the show will, go on. We hope. Hope is all you have in this precarious business.
Despite rain, the Trinity spirit was clearly evident on the banks of the Yarra River on 9 May when Trinity crews achieved consistently impressive results in the Intercollegiate Rowing Regatta. The Men’s First VIII led for most of the race but was caught at the line (by Queen’s) to finish a nail-bitingly close 2nd. The Women’s Firsts and Men’s Seconds also placed 2nd, while the Women’s Seconds rowed into 6th place. Congratulations to all crews on a splendid day of competition, rounded off by the successful re-establishment of the traditional post-rowing ‘Shums’ celebrations.

A 5th placing overall in the swimming, a strong performance in the table tennis, and an 80-run innings by Hamish Edridge in the First XI match against Queen’s maintained the sporting momentum. Winning two out of four matches was not sufficient to propel the tennis players into the finals, but a talented women’s hockey team made the grand final, only to find Ormond too strong on the day.

Yet there is more to sport than simply winning. Men’s Sports Representative, Hamish Edridge, and Captain of Soccer, Shunya Yamada, used the soccer season to raise money for cancer research in honour of former Trinity student, Tom Mathias – a talented sportsman and a trusted friend to many past and present students of this College – who passed away in January this year. This was done in the form of a ‘goal-a-thon’, with sponsors donating an agreed amount for every goal scored. The result was a donation of over $600 to the Victorian Melanoma Research Fund. It might have been more, had Trinity not lost a penalty shoot-out following a 0-0 draw with Queen’s in the quarter-finals.

First semester also saw some casual tournaments organised around the Crescent with the women’s basketball team placing second in that competition, while a casual mixed doubles tournament was run within Trinity during swot vac. This semester we are looking forward to the netball, men’s football, women’s football, athletics, basketball and rugby seasons.

Organized by Tom’s school and College friends, a Tom Mathias Birthday Memorial Soccer Match between the Old Melbourne and past and present Trinity soccer teams was held on Sunday 22 August at Melbourne Grammar School Sports Grounds.

Thomas Lewis-Mathias 21 August 1985–6 January 2009

Our community was deeply saddened at the passing of alumnus Tom Lewis-Mathias, a popular and highly regarded young man who brought joy to all around him. His talents and strengths were manifold – very able student, brilliant sportsman, inspiring coach, loyal and generous friend, with a keen sense of humour and great personal integrity.

Entering Trinity as a Commerce/Arts student in 2004, Tom quickly made his mark through his lively character, dry wit, and remarkable athletic ability. He was Billiards Room President in 2005 and became coach of a number of Trinity teams, particularly volleyball, a role he continued in recent years despite his ill-health. This commitment and positive spirit illustrates much of what was so special about him.
RE-BUILDING THE FENCES

The statistics from Victoria’s Black Saturday bushfires on 7 February are horrifying: 173 deaths; 2,200 houses destroyed; 1,500 people homeless. Less well known is that more than 8,000 kilometres of boundary fencing – twice the distance from Sydney to Perth – were also destroyed during Victoria’s worst natural disaster.

Keen to help the relief effort, a group of about 12 Trinity resident students and alumni travelled to Kinglake on 24 May to spend the day working for the volunteer re-fencing program coordinated by the Victorian Farmers Federation.

Arriving at about 8.30am, we were given a brief safety induction before being put to work and, despite some of the group having very little previous experience, by lunchtime approximately one kilometre of new fence was taking shape.

Late in the afternoon, we were particularly moved when some of the local farmers shared their stories of survival with us, and the experience of seeing first-hand the true devastation of the bushfires will not be forgotten.

Beyond the Bulpadock
Resident students participating in the wider community:

Aussie Volleyballer
Jason Hughes
(3rd Year Commerce) was a member of the Australian University Volleyball Squad that placed 19th (among 24 teams) in the World University Summer Games in Belgrade, Serbia, July 1-12.

Jason began playing volleyball in Year 7 and captained the Victorian squad in 2005 and 2006. He was selected in the National Youth squad in 2006 and since then has competed all over Europe, and in Malaysia, Japan and Iran with the Australian Institute of Sport, where he was also a member of the team that twice won the Australian Volleyball League title (2006, 2007). He was awarded All Star Australian Squad honours in 2004, 2005 and 2007, and was named the Bendigo Bank Academy of Sport Athlete of the Year in 2007.

On Air
From May until July, Nabil Azadi (3rd year Arts) and alumna Cynthia Sear (TC Zoos) featured German electro music. Nabil, who, dealing with personal losses, begins to question what is real, what is innocent, what is black, and what is white. Photography is used to manipulate the audience’s perspective, forcing them to question what is real, what is innocent, what is black, and what is white.

Teach for Australia
Lizzie Calder (4th Year Commerce) was selected in the ‘Age’ newspaper on 22 April, as an aspiring candidate for the government’s new Teach for Australia program. This international scheme sends high-achieving university graduates from non-teaching disciplines to teach in disadvantaged schools for two years and rewards them with a teaching qualification. Lizzie was quoted as saying, ‘Some of my strongest memories are of amazing teachers I had at school – I’d like to try and bring that enthusiasm to my students.’ A number of other Trinity students have also expressed interest in joining this initiative.

Dreamtime at the ‘G
Convened by Courtney Callister (2nd Year Environments) and the TCAC student leadership body, a Trinity contingent mustered on the Bulpadok at dusk on 23 May and proceeded as a group to Federation Square. From there they joined thousands of others in ‘The Long Walk’ to the MCG, in a symbolic reaffirmation of Trinity’s commitment to equality and respect between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Australians.

Honorary Mention
James Churchill (4th Year Music), who has just commenced his year-long Advanced Medical Science (AMS) research project at the Murdoch Childrens Research Institute in Melbourne, received an Honorary Mention for his research plan submitted in application for the 2009 AMSA-Avant Student Research Fellowship. The panel of researchers who judged the submissions described James’ proposed research into the causes of cryptorchidism (non-descent of the testes during foetal growth) as ‘very ambitious’.

Opera Down Under Inc
Under the guidance of noted conductor Richard Divall, Trinity chorister Siobhan Stagg (5th Year Music) is the co-founder of Opera Down Under Inc, a new opera company that provides development opportunities for young Australian singers. The company’s first production was Mozart’s one-act comedy The Impresario, staged in Melba Hall, the University of Melbourne, on 6 August, with a number of Trinity musicians in the 26-piece orchestra. These included Nelson Yarwood (4th Year Arts/Music) and Ben Sim (2nd Year Music) and alumni Paul EA Tsalloch (TC 2002) and Hugh Middleton (TC 2003).

Losing wins
Melcesha Bardolia (2nd Year Arts) was just 16 when she wrote Losing, the play that last year won her the 2003 St Martin’s Young Playwright Award from a field of about 60 aspiring young writers. In May 2009, hired actors presented her work as a play reading in the Chapel at St Martin’s Theatre, South Yarra. It was the first time Melcesha – who produced the 2009 College Play, The Birthday Party at St Martin’s – had seen her work performed. Now 18, she is working with dramaturge Petra Kalive towards developing a possible full-scale production next year.

Losing is an ambiguous political commentary on the situation in Zimbabwe. Through the eyes of photographer Peter Makele – who, dealing with personal losses, begins to question what is real, what is innocent, what is black, and what is white. Photography is used to manipulate the audience’s perspective, forcing them to question what is real, what is innocent, what is black, and what is white.

ONE THOUSAND SHINING WORDS

This series of four workshops spread throughout 2009 is an opportunity for Trinity students interested in creative writing to develop their work under the guidance of Trinity's writer-in-residence, Dr Steven Conte.

According to Steven, whose novel The Zookeeper's War last year won the inaugural Prime Minister's Award for fiction, there are many gifted potential writers who don't enrol in creative writing subjects offered by the University. 'Fiction writers emerge from every profession,' says Steven. 'These workshops are a chance for anyone who's interested to try their hand at fiction, though ideally participants will already be keen readers.'

The title of the workshops refers to the number of words that students are expected to produce in the course of the year. 'Given that most students already have heavy workloads, the amount of writing involved is deliberately small,' says Steven. The workshops allow students to experiment without the pressure of worrying about marks.

'Most importantly of all,' he adds, 'the participants are expected to present their work to the group for feedback. This can be nerve-wracking for some, but it's essential for writers to learn to put their work out there, because, in the end, finding readers is what it's all about.'

Ronald Cowan Scholarship
Awarded for the first time in 2009, the Ronald Cowan Scholarship was established last year through the generosity of Trinity Friend, the late Richard D S Webb, brother-in-law to the third Warden of Trinity (1946-1964), Ronald Cowan.
Richard Webb had a strong interest in supporting education. Living in rural Victoria, he also recognised the difficulties that sometimes face country students wanting to study at university. His estate established this endowed scholarship to fulfill both these goals.
The Ronald Cowan Scholarship supports a student, preferably pursuing a course related to environmental studies, in residence at Trinity College. The inaugural Cowan Scholar is Simon Sealey (1st year Science).

Should New Zealand be the seventh Australian state?
How better to decide than with an engaging debate between Trinity residents and visiting students from College House at the University of Canterbury, Christchurch, NZ. The contest took place beside the fire in the Junior Common Room on a chilly Saturday afternoon in May, as part of an inaugural cultural exchange welcoming 16 students from New Zealand's oldest residential university college to Trinity.
The busy weekend kicked off the previous evening at the annual College Play Gala Night with a full-house performance of Harold Pinter's 'The Birthday Party.' The cultural battle continued on Saturday evening as the theatresports teams competed, and the event concluded with exchanges from both colleges performing Vivaldi's Gloria with the Australian Brandenburg Orchestra on the Sunday and Monday evenings in the Melbourne Recital Centre. College House proved formidable cultural opponents, winning both the debating and theatresports, and thus the Trinity College-College House Exchange for 2009. Hopefully, Trinity can regain the title next time.

The Rickshaw Run

In April, six Trinity alumni spent 13 days driving 3,900 km across India in two three-wheeled Autorickshaws, raising over $9,000 for two charities. Alex Oppes (TC 2003) reports on their adventure.

An ‘average’ day:

5 am: Wake up in one of India’s seediest hotels. Load up the rickshaws. Fill the 7-litre fuel tank with oil and petrol (being careful to remember the golden oil:petrol ratio of 50:1000 for fear of serious mechanical issues throughout the day).

5:30 am: Begin driving at full throttle. Dodge the first of many wrecked trucks. Witness an amazing sunrise and scenery, and remember how lucky we are.

8 am: Muffler falls off (again). The motor becomes so excruciatingly noisy that driving is uncomfortable even with earplugs.

8:30 am: Tire of extreme noise and pedestrians pointing at our muffler. Drive to next town and get muffler fixed for AUD3.00. Multitask by enjoying curry for breakfast.

9 am: Realise it’s another day of extreme heat. Temperature soon reaches 46°C.

12 noon: Five-minute lunch break. More curry (or Pringles for those with food poisoning).

6 pm: Sunset. Roads become even more crazy. Time to find the best hotel in a small town that hasn’t seen a tourist for 10 years.

6:30 pm: Find said hotel. Immediately swarmed by 200 people wanting to introduce themselves and have their photo taken. Police come to clear crowds. Unpack car. Wash off entire day’s grime and prepare for another big day...

Letter from Harvard

Marina Connelly (TC 2008), who has been legally blind since birth, left Trinity in mid 2008 to take up a full scholarship at Harvard University.

Dear Everyone,

I had a truly wonderful First Semester 2008 living at the laundry end of Lower Clarke’s, singing with the Choir and being very much a part of the Trinity College community. Thank you for the wonderful friendships, stimulating conversations, exciting intellectual opportunities and numerous moments of pure and absurd hilarity; I loved challenging myself in the context of residential College life. At the end of my Year 2, I had applied — only as a dream — to go to Harvard, and found out half-way through my Trinity term that I had been accepted. The conversations and friendships, intellectual rigor and humor at Trinity provided me with the confidence and independence to try this next challenge happily and with success.

I have just completed my ‘freshman’ year at Harvard. The degree I am taking is a Bachelor of Liberal Arts and Sciences, which is a four year program. Like all other undergraduates, I live on the university campus. Freshmen live in the central Harvard Yard — 1,500 of us all together organised into ‘entryways’ of around 20. As at Trinity, we are assigned peer, academic and general welfare mentors from the Faculty. Everyone eats together in a dining hall the size of a cathedral and often sitting over dinner feels wonderfully and confusingly like watching a session of the UN General Assembly 50 years into the future.

This year I have taken Music, Classical Literature and Philosophy, and Italian subjects. I had an ethnomusicology class this term and worked in a group of eight with celebrated cellist Yo-Yo Ma and the Silk Road Project. I sing with the Harvard University Choir and in two student opera companies. In first term I played Susanna in The Marriage of Figaro and, more recently, took the role of Amor in Monteverdi’s The Coronation of Poppea.

In September I will go back to School to live in Lowell House, an upperclassman house about the size of Trinity and structured similarly. First term of second year is when students have to announce their concentration and I’m applying to study for a thesis degree in philosophy and psychoanalysis.

It is the loveliest thing to come ‘home’ to Trinity after a year’s absence and have people scream a greeting from across the Bul. I owe so much to this community for skills and foundations and wonderful experiences. I hope always to remain a part of it.

Thank you, again.

— Marina
That was the typical routine for Tim Foster (TC 2003), Sally Davies (TC 2003), Georgia Dunphy (TC 2004), Bron Scarr (TC 2003), Simon Tilleard (TC 2003) and myself as we raced across India - from Shilong in the far east, to Goa on the west coast - in two tiny, three-wheeled 'tin cans', one of which we decorated as a dog and named ‘Rowlfh’.

We were competing in the Rickshaw Run, organised by 'The Adventurists' to benefit two charities doing great work in India – Frank Water Projects, providing clean, affordable water in developing countries, and SOS Children's Villages, offering family-based, long-term care for children orphaned through war, famine, disease and poverty. Collectively, the 50 rickshaw teams involved raised sufficient funds to provide clean water for life for 30,000 people, and care for literally thousands of children.

For the first part of the race we decided to head off the beaten track, which allowed us to visit some of India's most remote villages in the foothills of the Himalayas and enjoy beautiful scenery from the region's winding, hilly roads. But these roads suddenly turned into four-wheel drive tracks and we found ourselves accidentally detouring through Bangladesh. Thankfully, we were taken in by locals whose generosity was immensely touching and made me reflect on how easy it is to lose sight of this quality in our own busy lives.

The 145cc Bajaj Autorickshaw is a much-maligned vehicle, variously described as 'loud, uncomfortable, prone to breaking down.' Certainly we were challenged when our (one and only) piston exploded, leaving us with no transport and no accommodation. But - able to negotiate treacherous roads while dodging wandering cows and buffalo, quick enough to play with the trucks in the fast lane, and narrow enough to undertake on the shoulder of the road - it turned out to be the most amazing vehicle in all of India.

UK-based classical pianist Geoffrey Saba (TC 1984) returned to Melbourne in August to give the first professional recital held in the new performance centre at Xavier College, Kew. The virtuoso program included Chopin’s Barcarolle Op.60 and Twenty-Four Preludes Op.28, and Liszt’s Sonata in B minor S 158.

Dr Morna Starrock, AM (TCTS 1965), has received the 2009 Dame Phyllis Frost Award in recognition of her work in promoting the role of women, including in the Church. Well known as a journalist, embroiderer and prominent Anglican laywoman, Morna is now working towards her second PhD – having gained her first in 2009, at the age of 80!

Denis Spangle (TC 1986) has recently commenced as Deputy Secretary, National Reform and Climate Change, in the Victorian Department of Premier and Cabinet, after having served for three years as Chief of Staff in the Office of the Vice-Chancellor at the University of Melbourne.

Fe Jeff O’Hare (TCTS 1986) has told the moving and inspirational story of 79 people from disadvantaged backgrounds in his book Brotherhood: Stories of Courage and Resilience, which was launched in June by Deputy Prime Minister the Hon. Julia Gillard, MP. With a Foreword by Russell Crowe and published by Penguin Australia, all royalties from the book go to support the work of the Brotherhood of St Laurence.

Rebecca Badenoch (TC 1986) and her six team-mates beat 20 other yachts to win the 2009 Australian Women’s Keelboat Regatta, hosted by the Royal Melbourne Yacht Squadron over the Queen’s Birthday weekend. Sailing Top Gun, an Adams 20 foot boat from the Royal Yacht Club of Victoria, they won all three handicap divisions, including taking first place on corrected time in five of the six heats under the international IRC handicap.

Michael Powell (TC 1994) and Tavia Rudd (TC 1993) were married in December 2008. The bridal party included Louise Rudd (TC 1996), Georgie Rudd, Charles Rudd (TC 1996), Michael Powell (TC 1994) and Kaine Lanyon. Tavia and Michael currently live in San Francisco.

Cheryl Chang (TCFS 1990) lives in Singapore, where she works as a Strategist for the Singapore Ministry of Trade and Industry.

Lucy Larkins (TC 2000) spoke at a Trinity Fireside Chat earlier this year about her experience working as a volunteer intern with Reprieve Australia to assist prisoners on death row in the USA. Now a qualified solicitor, she received a Fellowship funded by Reprieve UK that enabled her to return in May to New Orleans where she is involved in the welfare of mentally ill prisoners facing the death sentence in Louisiana.

Illustrator Simon Coronel (TC 2000) represented Australia at the International Federation of Magic Societies convention in July in China. Simon was the sole Australian at this major event that attracted over 3,000 magicians from around the world. He has also performed by invitation at the world famous Academy of Magical Arts in Hollywood. An article about Simon appeared on page 16 of Melbourne’s Age Newspaper on 23 July. www.simonconorl.com/home.php

In July, David Smerdon (TC 2002) became only the fourth Australian ever to qualify as a chess Grandmaster. Awarded by the World Chess Federation (FIDE), this is the highest rank a chess player can attain (except for World Champion) and is held for life. David is currently rated number three in Australia.

Following a highly competitive, international audition process, cellist and former Trinity chorister Richard Vaudrey (TC 2002) was awarded a place at the prestigious Manhattan School of Music in New York to undertake a Masters in Violincello. However, he deferred this offer and accepted a scholarship to the State University of New York (SUNY) at Stony Brook, where he is now studying under renowned cellist Colin Carr. Before heading to the USA in early August, Richard played as a member of the Lorelei Trio in the finals of the Asia Pacific Chamber Music Competition at the Melbourne Recital Centre from 1-5 July.

Tim Kerr (TC 2001) has moved to London where he is working for McKinsey & Company.

Linda Mariana (TCFS 2004) graduated with a BSc from the University of Melbourne and is now living back in Palembang, Indonesia, where she is teaching secondary level mathematics, in English, at Saint Ignatius Education Center.

Since studying at Georgetown, USA, in 2005, law graduate Fergus Green (TC 2009) has been interested in the climate-energy field, particularly from a policy, law and international relations perspective. After finishing University last year, he undertook two policy internships—one at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington DC and the other at the Lowy Institute in Sydney. He is now working with law firm Allen Arthur Robinson in their Energy and Resources practice group and is also a volunteer with Project Survival Pacific, assisting a number of Pacific Island States prepare for and participate in the Copenhagen climate change conference in December.

Richard Hawker (TC 2002) was included on the 2009 Dean’s List for Commerce.

Ali Alsineim (TC 2005) is heading off to the University of California Berkeley, USA, where he will live for five months on campus at the International House and study subjects to complete his Engineering and Science degrees from Melbourne.

TC 2005 alumna Fiona Scarlett, Amy Ross-Edwards, Car Moroney, Caitlin Reid and Dani Emerson featured in a prominent photograph on page 3 of the Sunday Age on 17 May, resourcefully expanding their wardrobes for free by swapping items of clothing. They also appeared on Channel 9’s A Current Affair program on 20 May. There’s a clip at http://k-Za.nine.com.au/article.asp?id=966040 (it follows an advertisement).

Jane Lovell (TC 2006) was awarded the Brookfield Foundation Scholarship for Rural Health Research for her Advanced Medical Science research year in 2008-09, exploring psychological wellbeing in remote communities. She has been President of the Melbourne University Rural Health Club, studied Japanese part-time, and done officer training with the Army Reserves. This semester she has commenced her clinical medical studies at Wanganilla.

Johnson Wang (TC 2006) has been offered a prestigious summer internship with McKinsey & Company.

Former Music tutor (1993-95) and Dean (2006-07) Dr Peter Tregear won a Green Room Award as best Conductor of an Opera for last year’s production of Faust and Klimt which was co-sponsored by Trinity. Peter faced stiff competition, with the other nominees being three conductors of Opera Australia productions and Richard Gill from Victorian Opera.

Mira Chow (TC 2007) was placed third among 35 students in the Bachelor of Advanced Medical Science. She was awarded the Dean’s Prize for Outstanding Achievement in 2007-08, and presented her research project at the graduation ceremony. She is now continuing with her 5th year medical studies.

Study Abroad students Michele Mestrinero (TC 2008) and William McManus (TC 2006) have returned to Philadelphia, USA, where they are sharing an apartment – and ‘remembering the good times at Trinity’ – while continuing their studies. Michele has had a research paper accepted for publication in the Journal of Zoology, and is applying to Harvard to do their 3rd MBA program.

Top 100 US Trial Lawyer

American attorney Annette DeGaris (TC 1990) has been named as one of the Top 100 Trial Lawyers by the American Trial Lawyers Association. Annette first came to Australia as a Rotary International scholar and gained her LLM in the area of International Law from the University of Melbourne. He is now a founding shareholder of the law firm Cory Watson Crowder & DeGaris in Birmingham, Alabama.

Appointed by a U.S Federal Judge to serve on the Plaintiff’s Steering Committee for litigation involving the drug Vioxx, Annette retained an expert at the University of Adelaide to testify in the case and returned to Australia in 2007 and 2009 to produce the depositions and videotaped testimony for use in the US court.

Annette has received numerous awards for her professional achievements. He was recently appointed to the Multimillion-Dollar Advocates Forum and holds the highest level peer-review rating awarded in the UI by the prestigious Martindale-Hubbell AV Rating.
ADVANCING TO UQ

Clare Pullar (below), who was Director of Development at Trinity 1997-2007, has been appointed Pro Vice-Chancellor, Advancement at the University of Queensland, commencing in September.

An excited Clare says that "in a new structure for the University she will be charged with developing the architecture for external investment in the University, from individual, public and corporate philanthropy."

Relishing the challenges ahead, she said, "I knew I wanted to contribute at the broader University level, but I didn't think an Australian university would be ready to take the lead from other parts of the world and make a professional appointment at executive level during my working life."

Clare credits Trinity donors and colleagues with encouraging her to think broadly about philanthropic possibilities. "Trinity was never selfish in its outlook and was prepared to partner with others to leverage gifts," she said. She cited examples such as alumni offering challenge gifts to boost the Annual Giving, working with faculties such as Law, Medicine and Engineering to establish scholarships, and collaborations in Indigenous education and scholarships.

"I will be using that experience to help the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Paul Greenfield, to broker gifts which will allow the University to meet its goals in research, teaching, and the student experience," Clare said.

Since leaving Trinity, Clare has been Director of Advancement at Melbourne Business School, finishing there at the end of June. In moving north, she looks forward to working with former Trinity Dean Professor Stewart Gill (TC 2000-04), who is Principal of Emmanuel College at UQ.

20-Year Reunion, Entry Year 1989

Friday 17 July in the Junior Common Room

Simon Glover kept things moving as MC, and Nick Cox proposed a Toast to the College, recounting the various highlights from 1989.

Headng Solomons Truth & Reconciliation Commission

A recent Theology graduate, the Very Revd Dr Sam Ata (TC 2002) has been appointed Chair of the newly established Truth and Reconciliation Commission for Solomon Islands.

Launched in late April by Nobel Peace Prize recipient Archbishop Desmond Tutu during his official state visit to the Solomon Islands, the Commission has been set up to help bring peace to communities still divided by ethnic tensions that led to five years of civil unrest, 1998-2003. It is an independent body, comprising three national and two international commissioners.

Father Ata - whose appointment was announced by Solomon Islands Prime Minister Dr Derek Sikua - was a student of Trinity College Theological School from 2002 until mid-2007, when he graduated with a Doctorate of Theology. For much of that time he was in residence and, during the later years of his study, was also an Associate Research Fellow of the Theological School.

Last year Father Ata returned to his homeland and became Dean of the Saint Barnabas Cathedral in the capital, Honiara. He has been calling on the government to investigate the root causes of the ethnic tension that has troubled the country.

The Warden, Associate Professor Andrew McGowan, believes Father Ata is an excellent appointee for this hugely important task. "Like Archbishop Desmond Tutu, who took the equivalent role in South Africa, Dr Ata is a man of humility and deep spirituality whose commitment to his own people is more than just a formal appointment," he said.

2009 FUTURE SUMMIT AUSTRALIAN LEADERSHIP AWARDS

Two Trinity alumnae - Caroline Adler (TC 1998) and Mollie Ross (TC 2001) - are among the 28 recipients of these national awards 'selected for their leadership ability and commitment to shaping the future of Australia'.

50-Year Reunion,
Entry Year 1959

Friday 15 May
in the Junior Common Room

MC Antony Grage guided this warm and friendly evening with great aplomb, while guest speaker Jonathan Hooper provided a series of engaging recollections, sparking many present to add their memories also. David Brownbill encouraged alumni to keep connected to the College and, where possible, to support the scholarship program.

Fleur-de-Lys Committee President Stuart Bell (ITC 1978), and Senior Student Eamon Byrne were guests, while Trinity's new female a cappella group, The Candystripes, provided a musical interlude.

1. Margaret Benham, Daryl Wraith
2. David Woods, Antony Grage
3. David Brownbill, Lee Brownbill, Carole Hinchcliff, Bishop James Grant

Choir aids bushfire relief

The Choir of Trinity College has contributed a track to a double CD, released in August, the royalties from which go to the VicRelief FoodBank for victims of Victoria's bushfires. The Choir sings Harris's 'Faire is the Heaven' on CD Two of Our Land in Harmony. ABC Classics 476 3552 RRP $30.95. Available from abshop.com.au, ABC shops, ABC centres, and fine music retailers.

Did you get it?
The Choir's rendition of Bruckner's Ave Maria was the only choral track included on a free CD – 'Life is Beautiful with ABC Classic FM' – distributed with The Age newspaper on Saturday 25 July.

STOP PRESS!
The Choir of Trinity College has been asked to sing as the entertainment during the judges' deliberations for the prestigious Herald Sun Aria competition on Thursday 19 October in Hamer Hall.

40-Year Reunion,
Entry Year 1969

Saturday 19 July
in the Junior Common Room

John Gibson did an extraordinary job of contacting fellow members for this reunion and was an engaging MC on the night. Rob Johanson gave the Toast to the College, and Tony Heinz proposed the Toast to Absent Friends. After the formal proceedings, various members took the opportunity to share their memories of College days.

1. John Gibson, Stephen Sheilmerdine
2. Rob Johanson, Chris Loveli
3. Robert Springall, Bruce Howman, David Parsons
THANK YOU FOR DIGGING DEEP!

We would like to thank the many alumni, parents and friends who have generously donated more than $300,000 so far to our 2009 Annual Giving. The College is aiming to raise over $400,000 this year to fund a range of activities, including the restoration of the Bulpadock, maintaining scholarship support, and other important projects which enable our students to receive the full benefit of the Trinity experience.

If you have not already done so, please consider making a gift. This can be done online by logging on to T-Line at www.trinityalumni.net or by completing and returning the Giving Form below.

TELL US WHAT YOU REALLY THINK!

How can we improve your experience of being a Trinity alumnus or alumna, anywhere in the world?

To help answer this question, Trinity is asking all alumni to complete a brief survey by the end of October this year. This important survey should take only about 10-15 minutes to complete and will be made available online and in hard copy. Please help us to provide better services for you by responding to the survey and encouraging other alumni to do the same.

Robert Brook Lewis
12 July 1918–26 May 2009

We remember his charm and cheerfulness, and his directness; his skill as a manager that enabled him to do well in several different careers; how curious he was about the world around him — his urge to know. We remember how much Bob delighted in people — all the lovely stories he would tell, and the happy relationships he developed. Impossible to forget is that eyebrow raised in pleasure and anticipation — that twinkle in his eye.

Bob Lewis was born and brought up in Melbourne, the second son of determined industrial leader, Essington Lewis and his warm, down-to-earth wife Glad.

Sent to board at Geelong when he was 11 years old, he won numerous books of poetry for his writing and other achievements, went off into the countryside on bicycling and sailing adventures, and in his last year was head prefect. As one of the rowing crew he travelled to Adelaide, and at a dance at St Peter’s College he met an especially lovely girl, Betty Price. They had several dances together that night. Betty later explained that it wasn’t ‘full on’ straight away; but Bob said, ‘Speak for yourself, it was for me!’

Bob studied metallurgy at Melbourne University, in residence at Trinity, rowing and playing footy, going to the ‘caf’ and the picture theatre in Faraday Street.

By the time he’d finished, the War had come. He enlisted but was pulled out of army training and sent to work for the Commonwealth Aircraft Corporation. In 1943 he had to go off to America, learning to build faster planes.

Just before he left, he and Betty got married. Betty’s father, Archie Price, was Master of St Mark’s College, and after the war he invited Bob to be vice-master. When he arrived, Bob began studying again at Adelaide University — economics this time. He was to end up with First Class Honours, and became a lecturer in social economics. He coached football and rowing and was president of the University Sports Association and Union.

His time at St Mark’s featured a doubling of student numbers and much building. Halfway through his time there, Archie retired. Bob said he would only accept appointment as Master if the College could not find a better candidate. There was a search and he became Master. With enormous support from Betty, he nurtured the place and those who lived there.

Eventually Bob felt it was time to give new blood a go at St Mark’s. In 1968 he returned to Victoria to head up the brand new Menzies College at La Trobe University. This turned out to be very different – the College was big with no sense of family.

After three years he bailed out and started a new career at the Institute of Applied Economic and Social Research at his old University. Working with Ronald Henderson, he was responsible as Deputy Director for much of the administration, assisting members with research projects, and maintaining links with the University. During the 1970s the Institute had a strong influence on public consciousness and policy, culminating in the Poverty Inquiry.

After 12 rewarding years and in their mid-sixties, Bob and Betty retired to ‘Mt George’, a stone cottage surrounded by bush paddocks and garden in the Adelaide Hills. While there, in 1985, Bob became President of the South Australian National Trust. After nearly 20 years they retired to Adelaide.

Family was important to him and over time he became the lynchpin of the extended family. In the centre was his enduring love affair with Betty, his companion and support for 66 years.

He is survived by her, and by Diana, David, Trish and Margie.

Philip Lyndon Wilson
7 December 1931- 22 February 2009

Philip (often 'George' or 'Grenelle') was the son of Canon P J Wilson (TC 1919), who was Chaplain at Melbourne Grammar, then Headmaster of Brighton Grammar. Philip entered the College from MGS in 1950 to study law, and soon became an identity. In his whimsical way he was the life of any party.

Philip rowed in the First VIII before famously injuring his back in a fall, mercifully into bushes, from his second floor window. He then coached the Second. A peripatetic student, he achieved high honours, including the Exhibition in Constitutional Law. A clear thinker and straight shooter who disdained College politics, he served as Indoor Representative of the TCAC.

The flavour of the man is conveyed by remarks from his contemporaries, John James and Hubert Miller. They mention his gift of coining uncannily witty nicknames, and his admiration for the elegance of Rolls Royce cars and the personas (his spats were decisive) of former Prime Minister S M Bruce. Philip loved tinkering with lesser cars and a motorcycle usually in pieces.

Having completed his law degree, Philip's year of articles at Blake and Riggsall was interrupted by postgraduate studies at the University of Toronto on a Mary Foundation Scholarship. After his return in 1956, he was admitted as a Barrister and Solicitor. But Toronto — or was it a young woman? — had captured him. He worked as a lawyer, and it bored him, with the Crown Trust Company, then, without seeing a path, becoming a chartered accountant. He developed the debilitating neurological disease that was to claim his life. He became increasingly immobile but continued to receive a stream of visitors with calm and dignity to the end.

His second wife, Katrina (Van Wyck) drew him into the aura and challenges of her passion for antiques. He was often left in charge of their shop, to muse over its contents and the virtual weekends, full of local colour, he took them to their upcountry farm, complete with atmospheric, red-brown barn.
